Answer to Question No. 1 False, because they are practically the same. Lust for money is only a symbol for the lust for power. They manifest the same basic passion—the desire for importance. A farmer lusts for all the "jinin" land; the railroad magnate, the connecting lines; the banker, the competing banks; the merchant, the competing stores. What men want is not money in itself, but influence, power and personal importance.

No. They should have the same love for each other and for the children, only manifest it in eliferent ways. Love is not some-thing you can divide up and give so much to this person, so much to that. With real love the sky is the limit. Of course, some parents dislike each other intensely and yet intensely love their children. No family can be happy that is not run on love.

By Dick Turner ANSWERS TO Modest Maldens By Jay Alen McKENNY ONBRIDGE

By WILLIAM E. McKENNEY

LAST WEEK I said that the most important lesson to learn in bridge is to count your tricks. Today's hand emphasizes the importance of learning that Looking over the hand, you will say, "I have no losing spades. I have two losing heart spades. I have two losing heart tricks, no losing diamonds (because one of them can be truffed), and one losing club." That gives you only three losing tricks. But you had better count your winning tricks.

You can take the ace and king of diamonds and ruff a diamond. The ace of clubs makes four tricks, and if you can manage to get in a club ruff, that would make six, and you can take three trump tricks. But that is only nine, so plan the play of the hand in the basis of nine tricks, rather than on losing three. Declarer has to start his planning on trick number one.

West, who is vulnerable, has made an overcall. Therefore we have a right to figure him for the king of clubs. Some way or other, we must try to throw him in the lead later on so he will have to lead a club. As one sure way to throw him in is in the heart suit, declarer refuses to win the first heart, trick in dummy.

When West continues with the when west continues with the queen of hearts, dummy's ace wins, the ace and king of dia-monds are cashed and the third diamond ruffed. When the queen of diamonds drops from the West hand, declarer feels sure that his line of play will work.

At this point, three rounds of trumps are taken, which picks up the trumps, then a heart is led. West wins with the jack and cashes the nine-spot. But then he is out of spades, hearts and diamonds. All he can do is
