ON BRIDGE By WILLIAM E. MCKENNEY

ONE of the things that we all enjoy in a bridge game is the strategy in planning that goes into it. Today's hand was played some time ago with Gen. Robert J. Gill of Baltimore, Md. The strategy employed by the declarer was very clever, but the general, who handled German war prisoners during the war and later was assistant to the U. S. Chief Justice at the Nurnberg trials, is familiar with strategy himself. His attack in this hand was well timed.

Declarer won the opening lead of the spade deuce in dummy with the ace and immediately with the ace and immediately took three rounds of trumps. Now the question was, did the general have a six or seven card club suit and three diamonds (South was quite certain that the opening lead of the deuce of spades was a singleton), it did not look as if declarer had any chance to make the contract. If he could find the general with a seven card club suit and just the king and one diamond, he could see a way to make the

At this point declarer cashed the ace of clubs, then the ace of diamonds. He was hoping that the general would have to win the second diamond with the king. He could cash a high club, but he would have nothing but clubs left and would have to lead one which declarer could trump in dummy and discard a loser from his own hand. Thus South would lose only two diamonds would lose only two diamonds and a club.

However, the general was on his toes and when declarer led the ace of diamonds, he quickly dropped his king. Now, when the second diamond was led, East won, cashed another diamond. mond and the jack of clubs, then led the queen of spades; and declarer still had to lose a spade trick.

column. You can't govern men in the mass unless you can kill them. But if they know you can kill them you can govern them without killing them. And unless the great powers agree on a jointly governed world-wide killing power, the idea of world peace is nonsense; Killing power and governing power go together. Without a united, world-governing power to con-trol world-killing power men-will go on killing each other forever. LONG BEACH (CALIF) PRESE-TELEGRAM WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1946
