NEW YORK, Oct. 13. (49) The question this Christmas isn't whether the children will continue to believe in Santa Claus.

It's whether Santa Claus can go on believing in himself. Every conference, all former children themselves prefix well dren themselves, pretty well agreed that for years Santa's more difficult.

No figure of modern times—except perhaps Mother Goose—has had a harder time keeping his self-confidence than the funloving Saint. He has more critics than a French premier, and season after season he is finding himself cabined, crimped and confined by more restrictions.

And the Santas present, in order to get a gilt-edged diploma certifying they were fit to deal "intelligently and sympathetically" with children, also had to pledge "to make no promises unless they can be fulfilled." might emulate the example of our Pilgrim forefathers: build our houses, plant our fields, but keep our loaded arquebuses BLEAKER FOR '49 personality by giving him the wrong gift.

And the Saint was brought under municipal ordinance. In one place he was forbidden to show up at department stores for his usual pre-season warmup if he had taken a shot of rock-and-rye to guard against pneumonia. In some cities he had to have his beard fire-proofed. In others they turned the flit gun on the old man—his whiskers had to be 99 and 44/100 per cent pure. Why, for example, should the idol of childhood remain a fat man? Too much fat is unhealthy. And dear old Santa is going to have to mend his past—and perhaps change his clothing. Why do you suppose he wears that red suit?
