Bill Doudna's SPOTLIGHT Fritz Kreisler

A living legend of American music: received the tribute of an audience of 1,300 at the Wisconsin Union theater Thursday night.

And 1,300 more will hear Fritz Kreisler and his violin in the same auditorium at 8 p. m. Saturday.

The eager listeners greeted Kreisler with an ovation when he appeared to open his program, applauded all his playing vigorously—even between the movements of a Mozart concerto—and called him back for encores and bows at the end of the concert.

Kreisler is 73, and he has played for American audiences hundreds of times since his U. S. debut in 1901. Thursday night he performed with much of the vitality and displayed much of the rich tone which made him popular—and kept him popular. For no single musician, probably, has played for more American listeners than Fritz Kreisler.

His long career, his very considerable help in building up American interest in good music, his own contributions to violin literature—all these have earned him a place among music's immortals.

But at 73, and with such a record, any man would be tired, and Kreisler was no exception Thursday night. The art was there, the lush tone was there, but the fire which made his playing of the Mendelssohn concerto a masterpiece was not there.
