melody when melody is the predominant feature. (I say "almost," for "scholarly" alone implies a lack of warmth.)

second.

Heermann has proved himself to Madison as an orchestral conductor. On Sunday, Dec. 19, the

Bach's fugue on the "Tema Regis."

The orchestra reflected faithfully Heermann's almost scholarly approach to the music. It revealed him as a perfectionist, paying close attention to the infinite details of harmony and rhythm from which great music is molded, yet with interest in melody when melody is the predeminant focusing of the two back numbers.

The program opened with the Beethoven piece, played with good dramatic sense, and continued with Heermann's transcriptions of the two Bach numbers. The first, for strings and harp, was especially fine; but the strings had some difficulty in keeping the lines unsullied in the second.

As did his predecessor, Heermann succeeded in merging musicians of diverse background into a unified whole.

City will have a chance to judge him as a choral director, for on that afternoon the Madison Civic chorus will face him to give its The Griffes symphonic poem 17th annual performance of "The was a gorgeous piece of music, in-Messiah."
