NEW SHOW IS HIT

Play Producer Rose Turns Tables, Writes as Critic

This comedy of bad manners is about show people, and its moss-covered plot concerns itself with their shenanigans during the out-of-town tryout of a play. Though the characters are pretty much stock—the temperamental actress, the fancy nancy director, the Gregory Ratoff-type producer, and the tough gal with the heart of gold—what they have to say is frequently funny. But to a fellow who has been around show business for 25 years, their carryings-on seem like the imaginings of an author who has never been on the road with a could cry," and he says it about 20 times. After watching out-of-town audiences greet this little line with gobs of silence for five and a half weeks, I can't understand why a usually skill-ful director didn't delete the next 19 repetitions. According to the columns, most of the characters in Hart's play are take-offs on certain members of the marquee and malarkey set, including the Roses. E. and B. Moss argues that they aren't patterned after definite individuals—they're all composites. I agree, but it's my belief that Moss is an essential never been on the road with a Let's see if I can't prove my
