Dear Abel: Met for your paper, I accepted with what the boys around Lindy's call "alacrity." So much for sound. As for the sight part of it, the opera is laid in Cypress at the end of the 15th Century, and judging from the unsightly piles of lumber masquerading as scenery, the sets must have been built around that time. The production motif is supposed to be Venetian, but as our old friend, tion motif is supposed to be Venetian, but as our old friend, Lou Holtz, might put it, it shouldn't happen to a dog. And as for the direction, clothes and lighting—well, they're up to the lighting—well, they're up to the usual Met standards, and no harsher words are in my lexi-

The last time I caught "Othello"—the Theater Guild production starring Paul Robeson—Mr. Shakespeare had a little something to do with the evening, and Will's play came through as the hard-hitting drama he intended it to be. The standard opera version is something else again—Shakespeare's plot is used, but only as a convenient rack for Giuseppe's music and Arrigo Boito's Italian versifying. And so, served up versifying.
