The name of Hrdlyka may be unpronounceable on this side of the Atlantic, but in that jagged little segment of the Balkan crazy-quilt that was Ferenc Hrdlyka's home, people had no difficulty in pronouncing it. And, indeed, his countrymen pronounced it often, and with reverence, because he was one of the most dedicated and inspiring educators of his generation. In 1941 when the heroes of Hitler goose-stepped into his country, a number was tattooed on the schoolmaster's arm, and he disappeared into the squalid hopelessness of a concentration camp. Worrled colleagues in England and America, knowing of his contempt for every form of dogma, were afraid he would not be heard from again.

But he was—in 1945 when the Allied troops marched into Dathy when the news had not the squalid thought again, and that night, for the first time in years, the old man slept without nightmares.

The next day was warm and sunshiny and Hrdlyka decided to take a walk in the park nearby. There, a group of small boys were playing ball and, struck by the foreign cut of the old man's clothes and his white beard, they stopped to stare at him.
