While Polly may want a cracker, the chances are that she will want it in her left claw. The Washington Zoo has found that three-fourths of its parrots are left-footed. Elephants display their preference for the play their preference for the right or left by using one tusk or the other exclusively for digging. The unused tusk is thus less worn down and therefore more highly prized by ivory hunters. Crickets, on the other hand, are all right-handed, while hand, are all right-handed, while katydids are all left-handed. Left-winged might be a more accurate term, since the deter-mining factor is which wing goes over the other. The left claw of a lobster, as HUMAN BEINGS are not alone in their tendency to be right-handed or left-handed. Elecrab, it's the left claw that re-sembles the violin, and the right claw the bow. But if the fiddler, crab loses his left claw, it's the right claw that grows into a violin and the left claw regen-erates as the bow. If both claws are lost, however, the fiddler crab goes right on being left nanded. Whether or not crabs become neurotic while changing hands has not been studied as yet .- Baltimore Sun.
