Only Rare Saint Assists in Crisis Without Gouging

By ROBERT QUILLEN

to the fable, man was re-quired to carry the faults of his race, which were placed in a sack and thrown over his shoulder.

But, unfortunately, the faults of his neighbors were in the front end of the sack, where he could see them, while his own were behind him and out of sight sight. One fault that all men abomi-

One fault that all men about nate is the heartless unfairness of monopoly. When a great corporation obtains control of some necessity, and thereafter charges the public more than the commodity is worth, it merits and receives almost universal condemnation.

To be "gouged" by some swine who has you at his mercy is one of the most infuriating of all-experiences; for you can hit back only by doing without his service, and that would hurt you as much as it would hurt him. As we hate the tyrant's abuse of power, so we hate the greedy monopolisit's legalized extortion. three dollars a day, but he has a monopoly of skill in that region and he thinks you able to pay. Does he charge you the usual three dollars or demand your eye balls? Who charges a fair price for a building lot or right of way or anything else that another must have at any price?
