physical Observatory at Victoria, B. C., reports the discovery of two stars respectively about 28 and 34 times as large as the central orb of the system to which the earth belongs. Known thus far simply as HD215835, these monster fragments of infinity are roughly 40,000 multiples of our sun in brightness. Their our sun in brightness. Their surface temperatures are ap-proximately 36,000 degrees centigrade—that is, about six times as hot as Shakespeare's "fire that severs day from night."

The distance of Dr. Pearce's twins from the earth has been estimated as nearly 7000 light years or over 41 million billion miles. One star races around the other at a speed believed to be about 125 miles a second as compared with the 18 miles a second at which the earth re-volves around the sun. If the two whirling masses consist of the same materials as our parent body, they must be reduced to a much greater gaseousness. This would mean that they are, in effect, two gigantic flames. It would appear to follow that eventually they would burn themselves out. But, so vast are point worth considering in relation to Dr. Pearce's discovery is that of the lesson which it sug-gests for the human inhabitants of the earth. It is good occasionally to remember how small, how pitifully tiny, are men and all their affairs when judged against such immensity as the sky. Huge as they are, the stars called HD215835 are relative pigmies. There are at least two other groups which are known to be larger and brighter and hotter. And none of all these colossal blazes can be seen through any ordinary telescope. They are so far away as to have escaped detection for ages. Beyond them, probably, are thousands of other celestial migrants which no instrument can reach.

At the other extreme, the electronic microscope is revealing objects so small that they must be coated with gold to be photographed. Anybody who can explain a creation so comprehensive and so complex as that in which mankind is involved without acknowledgement of the Creator must have unparalleled imagination. — Washington Evethey in size and so dynamic in ning Star.

This family tradition began at penmanship books—John Doe and Richard Roe.

Answer to Question No. 1

Yes. Nearly all kids then had some sort of home. But Dr. R. A. McKibben says in 1946 2,000,000 mothers with children under 10 had to work away from home. Four million children had lost one or both pardren had lost one or both parents; 700,000 homes had been broken by divorce and 100,000 habies that year were born out of wedlock. He adds that we need 5000 more pediatricians, 50,000 more public health nurses, 100,000 more teachers, 15,000 more child welfare workred-faced Messrs. Gallup, Roper and Crosley asked a committee of sociologists and statisticians to go over their figures and try to figure out why they had made such ghastly errors.

The committe has now reported. It says that the pollsters were operating in good faith—which is scarcely news. It says ers, 10,000 more psychiatrists and 15,000 more clergymen. I would add we need 10,000 more psychologists to give vocational advice, and 10,000 more marriage counsellors.

> Answer to Question No. 2 Yes. Formerly when the children were reared, Mother and Dad went on living alone with occasional visits from the children and grandchildren. If left a widow, mother lived around among the children—sometimes wanted—sometimes not. Now, mother hops out and gets a job. She sells vacuum cleaners, job. She sells vacuum cleaners, gets a job in an office, sets up a small dress shop, or makes some hobby pay. The Dept. of Labor shows that of the 20,627,000 women in U. S. over 45, about half are "gainfully employed." Quite a revolution!

Answer to Question No. 3

No. For instance, as quoted by Britt in his Social Psychol-ogy, one candidate in a recent election said: 1. "We must re-store and revitalize liberty." 2. "We must restore and revitalize morals in government." 3. "We must restore decent life and living to one-third of our farmers and workers." 4. "We must restore competence in government." Not even a Communist could object to this pious poppycock, but how he would do all these utopian things was left to the imagination. So with most political speeches.
