Paul F. Hunter, Jr., gave a sterling impersonation of Lachlen McLachlen in the Madison Theater Guild's production of "The Hasty Heart" at West high school Friday night.

overlook the good work of other members of the cast.

His was a difficult role, requiring more than just an accent to make it come alive; it called for an actor who could win sympathy for a belligerent introvert wanting none, who heat it off with ing none, who beat it off with words and slashed it with cutting

And Hunter put it over ,with a capable group of fellow actors as

The scene was a hospital hut in Burma, peopled with a beautiful nurse, patients from America and the reaches of the British empire, and mosquitoes. The play was a simple, tragic tale, touched with enough tomfoolery to make it good theater.

Into the congenial company came McLachlen, self-contained and self-sufficient.

Of all the people in the hunt, only McLachlen was unaware of the fact he faced certain death soon from infection.

soon from infection.

The others broke down his reserve, found loneliness in his casing of bitterness, made him a friend.

Then army orders forced a doctor to tell him the truth, and he furned on his companions in the belief that they had befriended him only from pity—turned on the nurse he had learned to love.

But as he prepared to leave, they won him back in a moving scene which rivalled in effectiveness the tenseness of the denunciation which had preceded it.

Joe Klein played the Yankee

Joe Klein played the Yankee with a telling reticence which helped immeasurably to make true the picture of Lachlen's transformation and to enhance the force of the climactic scenes.

Donald Trachte, as an Austral-

Donald Trachte, as an Austral-Donald Trachte, as an Australian, and Robert Snively, as an obese Briton, furnished most of the play's broader comedy, with Vernon Smith's quiet New Zealander supplying contrast.

Conard Harris had a moving role as the silent Basuoto on whom Lachlien venter his final wrath.

Marilyn Eddy made the nurse's slowly growing love for the Scot Lionel Hampton's stage revue is Ray Stanley had only one chance to do much, but this he
