Fantasy being what it is, and "If There Isn't-There Ought to Be" being fantasy, one shouldn't expect things to add up; they never do in dreams. In this one, they total up to an evening of variegated do in dreams. In this one, they total up to an evening of vallegated entertainment. But when fantasy is transferred to the stage, it needs more unity and coherence than dreams have, and these were the two factors on which the present opus short-changed us. Nevertheless, the good points of the ter stage beginning Monday. [13]

the show, which opened Friday night at the Wisconsin Union the ater and which will be repeated at 8 tonight, outnumbered the less happy ones. The story upon which the pro-ducers hung their entertainment was about an inventor who made a "fabricator," into which one could pour raw ideas and from which he could draw finished scenes, complete with music and dance. After considerable diffi-culty, he sold the idea to an old-fashioned theatrical producer, but when the question of machine-until a timeless Muse stuffed the ballot box. "If There Isn't—" was largely the work of Mrs. Shirley Genther of the University of Wisconsin faculty; she wrote the music and was co-author with Michael Brau-de, Chicago poet, of book and lyr-ics. Fredrick A. Buerki directed the speaking cast, Louise Kloep-per directed the dancing, and Ag-nes Bailey and Dr. Bjornar Ber-gethon had charge of the sing, and some drum-beaters. The cast was co-osed of mem-bers of Orchesis, sconsin Play-ers, Sigma Alpin I tota, and the University of Wisconsin Men's Chorus. Briefly, highlights of the show were these." in Nakoma to Thorsens Briefly, highlights of the show

Briefly, highlights of the show were these: The dancing and speaking of Marjorie Muehl Parkin (of Chi-cago) and Robin Gregory, as two muses; The acting of Dr. Annette Washburne, psychiatrist, who oddly enough played a psychia-trist; The inspired solo dancing of Mary Hinkson, who gave even the angular postures of her dance a tigerish grace; The delightful same of humor

Mary runnous, is of her dance a tigerish grace;
The delightful sense of humor of the girls in the traditional "chorus line," which they made more Haresfootish than a ny Haresfoot troupe (Marie Jordan, on the left end, was a standout);
The original ideas in many of the dances, especially in the psychiatry sequence;
A topnotch song—"The Parable of the Acorn."
Much of the staging and its ideas — particularly the use of aluminum foil in costumes a nd settings.
