RULE BY WOMEN FANCIED

Brunettes vs. Blondes Foreseen in Final War

By HAL BOYLE

NEW YORK (AP) News item— "Professor says women are natural peacemakers and proposes they rule world for next thousand years. Predicts there would be fewer wars."

It was the year 3001, the thousandth anniversary of woman's rule of the world. The morning dawned cold and clear. A skinny, undersized man and a runty boy, both clad in patchy rabbit fur, crawled shivering from their hill cave. The two were father and son. With numb hands they began to collect bits of firewood, planning constantly around to see that no wild animal crept upon them. From inside the cave came the sound of heavy snoring. "We must hurry and make the cave warm," said the man nervously, "or your mother will beat us with a club when she wakes." The little boy sighed moodily.

"Sometimes I wish we hunted for food and ruled the cave instead of mother," he said. "Rule the cave?" snorted the father. "Why, boy, there was a time when men ruled the whole world. That was the time when the earth was full of people." "Other people in the world besides you and me and mother?" asked the boy. "How odd that sounds. I don't believe you." "Yes, millions of people," insisted the father. "So many that even the wild animals were afraid of them." "Now I know you are joking," said the son. "Animals afraid of people? That's ridiculous. We're afraid of animals." "In the long ago it was all different," said the father. "I heard the tale from grandpa who had told it by his grandpa. "Once people lived together in great cities and were ruled by men. They had weapons that could kill animals at great distances. They could put down their thoughts by making marks in stone, and other men could see the marks and know what had been in their minds." "What happened?" said the boy, who didn't believe a word of it. "Well, the men turned their weapons against each other and there was a long series of great wars. Finally, women asked if they could rule. They said they weren't so pugnacious. And the men, weary of killing, agreed." "And what happened then?" said the boy, laughing to himself at the whole fairy tale. "At first there was peace for a hundred years. But then, so grandpa told me, power corrupted women, as it does all people. They became vain and greedy, and they fought among themselves, and war came again into the world. "Women first fought by nations, destroying each other's men and children. Then came the great vanity wars—first, the war of the girdles and then the war of the brassieres." "What are brassieres and girdles?" "No one remembers," said the father. "Perhaps they were terrible religions of some kind. But their followers have all died out now. "And then came the great 500-year war of the colors. Women used to be blondes, redheads or brunettes. The blondes and redheads got together and wiped out the brunettes. Then the blondes and redheads warred to extinction." "What are we?" inquired the child. "We can't tell because there isn't anyone left to compare colors with," said the father. "And what was the last war about?" "Me," said the father. "I was the only man left in the world. But there were two women. They fought over me. Your mother won. She is a strong woman." "And when shall we finally have peace in the world?" asked the boy. "Soon," said the man. "Soon—when your mother and I are gone. You'll have peace, all to yourself alone." Just then a deep contralto voice growled sleepily from the cave: "What are you two silly men-folk doing out there?" The boy—the little snitch—ran fawning toward the cave. "Coming, mother dear," he said. "Father's been telling me lies again."

Shouldn't they though? Husband ruin as many marriages as wives, usually by little things—not necessarily "little blondes, little brunettes and little red-heads" but other little things almost as serious. Husbands who think week-ends were intended, or letting beards grow, who complain of the cooking, who never take "the little woman" out for a dinner, who insist their wives dress soberly, but notice the woman in the daring outfit—well, such husbands torture their wives, often without knowing it, and are asking for trouble.

Answer to Question No. 2
No, although it is a pretty common trait in all of us. There are two good remedies. First think of things in which you are superior to him. Maybe you are bigger, healthier, better looking, can talk better or dance better. Second, remember he (or she) is trying to awe you and is afraid he (or she) won't succeed. The woman in the stunning outfit is afraid she can't awe you, but hopes her dress will. The man behind the big desk hopes his desk will give you the KO as he is afraid he cannot. In short remember you are both playing the same game.

POOR PA

Ma can't understand why there were ninety-nine that didn't stray, but she says she imagines it was because they were sheep instead of people.

Answer to Question No. 3

No. Children that age are hardly intelligent enough to tell a deliberate lie with malice aforethought. They tell the most absurd stories but they are not lies. They are imaginary experiences which they cannot separate from real happenings. They are day dreams they have lived through. The cure is not to scold them but to try to show them what the real truth is. Adult savages honestly think trees and animals talk to them. So does the child whose mind is as undeveloped as that of the savage.

Overtime on Overtime

THE HOUSE VOTE of 230 to seven is taken to mean that Congress will ban the so-called "overtime on overtime" payments to certain workers. Premium wages is a better term. In certain trades, such as stevedoring and building construction, in which a 40-hour week may be made up partly of hours on Sunday at night, or on holidays, time and one-half is then paid. The question arose if when work exceeded 40 hours, time and one-half overtime payments should be figured at the regular rates or also upon the premium rates given for the Sundays holidays and nights. —Oakland Tribune.
