Q. How much danger from lightning is there if the aerial of a television set is not grounded? C. M.

A. The National Bureau of Standards says that a television antenna mounted on the roof of a house is usually supported by a vertical metal rod. The metal rod should be effectively ground-ed for lightning protection. The transmission line leading from the antenna to the television re-ceiver should have a televisionline lightning arrestor located outside the building near the point where the transmission line enters.

Q. How is it possible for a large snake to be tied into several knots and manage to untie itself without harm? L. N. E. A. A snake can be none the worse for having been tied in two or three knots because of two or three knots because of the large number of bones or vertebrae in its back, not be-cause there is a great deal of freedom of movement between the individual vertebrae. The bones of a snake's back are near-ly alike from the neck to the end of the body and in some species there are more than 300

The correct answers to these radio quiz contests now are printed in $1 tip sheets, hawked on the streets around Broadway's neon temples. They are much more accurate than the four-bit tout cards peddled at most race tracks.

NEW YORK. (49) It is welcome competed to see which could give giveaway show is offering a live zany prizes. A typical package might include a trip to the South Pole, four prassiers, a motor car. 200 used pogo sticks, a sow complete with litter, a refrigerator, a stove, a motor car and a leaky Liberty ship.

The winner of such a package was no longer a human being. He became a human hock shop, frantically seeking bidders for his impractical loot. This chaos is reduced to order at one master stroke by the offer of an elephant. A live whale as first prize would have been only an elfin gesture. All a man can learn from a whale is how to swim.

But an elephant—there's some-thing really practical. It points up anew how barren have been the rewards of higher learning in America till now. In its 336 years Harvard University has never seen fit to offer its graduates an elephant. No, it gives nothing but a broad "A" accent and a paltry sheepskin. They even remove the wool from the sheepskin—wool with which a handy Harvard man could easily weave himself a suit. Yet Harvard has an endow-ment of about $160,000,000. It is no wonder, perhaps, considering the tight-fisted largesse of wealthy universities, that more and more thoughtful and ambitious Americans are turning to radio giveaway programs. Here

W YORK. (2) It is welcome competed to see which could give some may wonder why the news indeed that a radio away the oddest assortment of award of an elephant over the eaway show is offering a live zany prizes. A typical package air is of historic importance. They may recall that in Siam a wealthy man often took revenge upon his poorer neighbor by giv-ing him a white elephant. The white elephant was sacred. And the poverty-stricken neighbor sank into ruin as the elephant ate him out of house and home.

But an elephant—white or gray, not pink—would be a real economic asset in any American home today. Elephants make wonderful baby sitters, and all they ask is hay. As any parent knows, what baby sitters ask nowadays certainly ain't

Elephants also are more handy around the home than a husband. They will move heavy furniture about all day long without complaining. They can be taught to sweep, spray dirty dishes, dust rooms. They are loyal and won't gossip about your household affairs, as some maids have been known to do

An elephant won on the radio should be regarded, for tax purposes, as a capital gain rather than as pure income. The own-er could read him the encyclopedia—or send him to Harvard.
After that he could become ouickly wealthy by letting the elephant, a beast of fabulous memory, compete for him on the radio giveaways.

Who knows? Some day they may put a human being up as first prize—and an elephant will win him,

Yes. Some people are born with happier temperaments than others. But environment can spoil the best temperatments and improve the worst. In her wise book, "Life With Family, Jean Child.
