UW Socialist Club Announces Speaker

Francis Heisler
Francis Heisler, CIO union counsel in the 1943 Montgomery Ward and Co. strike and noted Chicago labor attorney, will speak at the University of Wisconsin Socialist Club May Day meeting, Friday at 8 p. m. in 116 Education-Engineering building. Peter Nemenyi, club program chairman, announced Tuesday.
The meeting will be open to students and faculty.

Brahms' "Lullaby" is one of the sweetest and simplest of melodies. But Rubinfoff, the violinist, wasn't satisfied with it that way. Oh, no. He had to dress it up with turns and other musical flummies, as he did with just about everything else he played at West high school auditorium Tuesday night. About 200 persons were in the audience.
As if that weren't enough he felt called upon to interrupt it for a lecture (while the piano kept on playing) on motherhood, work, Russia, and Americanism.
Rubinfoff also added to the program his opinions on the good behavior of Madison children and the poor quality of the piano at West high, and the comment that "I might as well play some more, because after two days in Madison I know that there isn't any place to go when I get through here."
Then he brought the audience to its feet by the expedient of playing "The Star Spangled Banner" in pounding march time, which may be good, but I don't think so.
Rubinfoff also made a speech about the "biography of the artist" which he said was supposed to be on the printed program but wasn't, his Stradivarius, his Pavarotti medal, and other matters, including his importation by Victor Herbert.
The violinist's selections were almost exclusively dressed-up versions of familiar music, some of them over-dressed. When he turned to swingy tunes, or frankly lush arrangements, he was good, and he displayed an appropriately humorous approach to variations on "Don't Fence Me In." His own "Fiddlin' the Fiddle," an early jazz solo, was first-rate.
David Vazquez, his accompanist, played better at that than in his
