Will it take to make a layer %-inch thick? B. A. P.
A. The National Bureau of Standards says that the number of coats of exterior house paint required to attain a given film thickness depends on the composition of the paint and the rate at which it is spread. House paint formulated in the convenional manner and spulled at a paint formulated in the conven-tional manner and applied at a normal spreading rate yields a dry film thickness of approxi-mately 0.002 inch. One hundred and twenty-five coats would, therefore, be required to produce a coating one-fourth inch thick under the stated conditions assuming there are no losses in film thickness from absorption or weathering.

Q. What is the term applied to the relationship between hus-band and wife as distinguished
