OCCASIONALLY, a newspaper pan, I, too, did a lot of ogling of the MacArthur administration. Usually, the carpy correspondent leads off with a summary of Japan's economic ills and inadequacies and, nine times out of 10, winds up by recommending that someone in civ-vies replace the general—neatly sidestepping the bothersome chore of telling us who this allwise civilian might be. Well, during my visit to Ja-

And what's more, that a sense-mak-ing appraisal of MacArthur's job would require several months of on-the-spot work - even if the skulls belonged to smart fellows like Bernard M. Baruch, Walter Reuther and 1ke Eisenhower.
To begin with, the 80,000,000 people of Japan live on a chunk of terra firms about the size of Montana and even before we sprinkled it with block-busters and uranium, less than 25 per cent of its soil was suitable for raising things. But even more important than such statistics, hen it comes to appraising MacArthur's job one must never forget that the customs, codes and cogitations of millions of Japanese are as far removed from our way of thinking as the Well, let me give you a few flabbergasting frinstances.

For openers — in many parts of Japan, when a house is built the roof is constructed first and laid to one side. When the carpenters have completed the walls and gone home, the roof is nailed in place by the fire department. And to make sure the building doesn't catch fire, the symbol for water is chalked
