Caltech's Supernursery Can Duplicate Any Clime,

NEW WORLD OF AGRICULTURE

By RALPH DIGHTON

Promises Giant Plants

DASADENA, June 4. (#) A new world of agriculture, in which plants that never see the sun or feel the elements produce crops of incredible size and flavor, is just over the horizon.

Between that world and this, scientists say, lie only a few years of experimentation—in a brand new "climate factory" at the California Institute of Technology.

It's the Earhart Plant Research Laboratory-a supergreenhouse with built-in weather and soil controls. Every kind of climate in the world which will support plant life can be reproduced in this $400,-000 nursery. Built with funds donated by the Earhart Foundation of Ann Arbor, Mich., it will be dedicated next week.

Known as the "phytotron," this laboratory will recreate or eliminate artificially all but one of the known factors in plant growth such as soil, climate, insects and sunlight.

The one factor which the phytotron will not be able to control is cosmic radiation. These are the mysterious rays which come from somewhere

"We don't know any way to protect our plants or ourselves from these radiations," says Dr. Frits Went, director of the laboratory. "But we hope, by controlling all other factors, to learn exactly what effect these fadiations do have."

Tadiations do have.

"Strangely enough, we already know more about the effects of radiation—through X-ray experiments—than we do about the effects of weather. Experts have bred strains of fruit and vegetables for one characteristic or a nother through generations, and have never known which effect was due to breeding one year, or to weather the next.

Rain, fog and even smog (smoke and fog) can be created by the turn of a valve on the huge instrument board in the director's office. Plants brought into the sealed, airconditioned laboratory are fumigated. The chemically-enriched sand which serves as soil is sterilized. Scientists who tend the plants wear sterilized overalls and boots, because bacteria and insects might be brought in on street clothing.
