By BILLY ROSE

Today's Smile

Well, back in the roaring and rat-tat-tatting twenties Harry and his merry Oldsmobile were line in front of Lindy's original restaurant at Broadway and 50th, and many of his off-50th, and many of his off-handeries—especially about women—became part of the lingo and lore of the period. To give you a couple of quick frin-stances: "Never give a wife a present without you got a reason," and "Money talks, but dames talk louder."

One August evening I picked up Harry at his usual stand and told him to drive me around Central Park, counterclockwise. I was looking forward as much to the cooling effect of his reflective tidbits as to the park breezes, but for once the cabble seemed fresh out of words and the nape of his neck wore a moody look.

"It's hot," I finally observed.

"How hot you are," said the philosopher, "depends on how much hot water you're in. Me, "How come?"

"How come?"
"I told a lie to my wife."
"Has she caught you?"
"Not yet." said the hackie,

-Sen. Harry P. Cain (R.) of Washington, referring to critics of former Defense Secretary! James Forrestal.

by Dick Turner WHAT OTHERS

Cassell goes in and Gurkenheimer stays outside to make sure I keep the motor running, and pretty soon Cassell comes running out with a bunch of bills . in one hand and a pistol in the other, and I commence going around corners on two wheels like I see them do in the movies. Cassell says, 'It's too bad I had to conk the bartender, but he wasn't acting co-operative.

Just to be sure, Doctor, tell him the last line is something little This gets more serious," I "There's more," said Harry, "Gurkenhelmer suddeny remembers a girl named Mabel who lives on 39th St. and who can always dig up a bottle for a pal.

"Please, fellas, leave me out of this,' I say to them. I'm a married man and you know Annie.'
"'We know Annie,' says Cassell, 'and if you're gonna face up to her you need another drink.'
"This time they tip me two bucks and drag me up to the apartment. Mabel makes everyapartment. Made indeed the body welcome, and so does her roommate, Gladys, and so does their roommate, Marge, and to be sociable I have a few drinks with them." "You start with a little lie," I "You start with a little lie," I said, "then it's a drinking bout, then it's a robbery and armed assault, and now."

"Theres" more," said Harry, "When I finally get home I tell Annie about the repair truck and hand her the night's take t and hand her the night's take and I must say she gives me no I lip—dough and dame trouble, as I you know, seldom go together. But when I wake up the following peeyem, it is all over the front pages how the barkeep at the Cuddie Club was killed in a stickup and it looks like maybe my friend, Cassell, doesn't know his own strength."

"So now it's murder you're in-
