Frederick C. Ebbs of the Baldwin-Wallace college music faculty conducted the band, except for the last number—"On, Wisconsin"—for which Emmett Sarig. ir acting conductor of university bands took the baton. The number was in tribute to Prof. Raymond F. Dvorak, university band director who has returned to a hospital for another in a series of operations which resulted from a train accident.

Concert Theorem 19 to the Baldwin sense marked them both. This, Iltis said, was only a sample of what's coming next suggested that the sening next suggested the same work. Lovely tone and excellent hythman sense marked them both. director of the clinic, spoke at intermission time.

Intermission time.

The youngsters, who come from all over Wisconsin, from other states, and even from Canada, paid the strictest of attention to Ebbs' conducting without being mechanical about it. And apparently they had paid equally strict attention to the other instructors who supervise the various sections of the band during the clinic.

For less than two weeks' nearly sections of the sections.

For less than two weeks' re-hearsal, it was remarkable, even when you consider that these youngsters are the pick of the state's high schools' musical crop.

Takes Ability

Desire isn't enough to get some-one into the classes of this clinic; ability, as certified by school offcials, must be there, too. This was best shown, perhaps, in the playing of the familiar an-dante from Tachaikowsky's sixth symphony, and almost as well in the march from the same work. Lovely tone and excellent thyth-
