Tennessee Williams' "Lady" was a forerunner of "A Street-car Named Desire," and in its brief moments built up something of the character of Blanche in the full-length play. The scene was the same, a shoddy place in New Orleans' French, quarter. Mrs. Mears, as played by Jo Mac. Eachron, was Blanche as she neared the end of her rope—alcoholic, neurotic, living in a street to the standard place in the full-length play. The scene will be free to students who present Union members have a street when it plays at the Orpheum theater Monday. Ang. 15.
