Blackwood on Bridge (By Easley R. Blackwood)

An important branch of the subject of finesses is the study of when and how to avoid them. Sometimes you can throw an opponent into the lead at a time when he must lead right back into your tenace holding. At other times (as in today's hand) your knowledge of bridge humanics will suggest a play that is superior to a finesse. None vulnerable. South dealer. WEDDING GOES THROUGH GOLDEN, Col.—(UP)—Harold J. Mikola promised his fiancée, Marion Dawicki, that they would be married soon. He went ahead with his plans, even though the ceremony had to be performed in the Golden jail. Mikola had been picked up on a bad check charge. She returned the three clubs and Mr. Dale won with the ace. The opponents already had three tricks and were bound to get a club. It was therefore obvious to Mr. Dale that somehow he had to avoid the loss of two heart tricks. Note that this would have been easy if the nine of hearts were added to either the closed hand of dummy. But lacking the nine, the heart situation looked pretty hopeless. Mathematically Mr. Dale's best chance with this combination was to hope that Mr. Muzzy had five hearts to an hour, which would

If It Happened Last Night (By Earl Wilson)

NEW YORK—Every day somebody asks me, "What are these glamour girls that you interview really like?" After about 15 years around Broadway—it's that long since I arrived from Ohio—greatest state in the union—I can tell you they are hard to crack when the questions get personal. Take Ingrid Bergman. I've interviewed her about 10 times — the last time in Rome last August, just after she and Rossellini returned from Stromboli. She'd always been forthright and cooperative, yet very serious. ... she left me a little awed with her integrity. In New York last spring—before she went to Italy—she was discussing her box office appeal, and confessed, "I know I'm slipping." Few stars would ever admit such a thing. But she did. "That midnight when I saw her in Rome late last summer I had to agree first not to ask about Rossellini. The report was already around Italy—had even been published there—that she was expecting a baby. Rather sharply, she denied it. She said it was absurd. Then there's Rita Hayworth, whom I saw in Paris, and talked to in another interview I'll never forget. Everybody was saying that the Princess Aly Khan was expecting, but to me she most emphatically denied it. That was the middle of July. I conclude from all this that the glamor girls consider such questions none of a reporter's business. They may even be right. (What do you think?) Paulette Goddard's laughing type who can giggle you away from your question. She won't answer, if she doesn't want to, and laughingly tells you so. Once I introduced her to a publicity man from her studio who'd written her a release about her. "I've never met you," he told her, "but I know all about you." "Oh, no, you don't," she laughed. Then there's Hedy Lamarr, the most beautiful of all. One night in Toots Shor's, customers were looking at a woman who, they said, was a double for Hedy. Or was it Hedy? They couldn't be sure. They asked me. I'd interviewed Hedy in Hollywood a few months before. "It's not Hedy," I said. I thought I'd better find out who it was. I started up to the table to ask the girl her name—and she stuck out her hand and shouted, "Hello!" It was Hedy. Gregory Peck is shy. Once he didn't want to give me an interview. I felt badly about it. Then he explained. He didn't have any jokes or gags or humor of the kind that I like in my column. He was afraid he'd be unable to give me a good story. He didn't want to waste my time. Mae West—now she's fine. For my birthday she gave me a necktie. Milton Caniff told me the design was a fig leaf. I asked her whether it was, and she agreed. "I wouldn't recognize a fig

Pup's Warm, Snug, But Needs a Home

ALLENDALE, N. J. — (AP) — A little pup was warm and snug on Christmas day — but lonely and unaware his execution is pending. Through no fault of his, the white animal of terrier descent with black ears, is scheduled to die soon unless he is adopted. Here's how it all came about, according to a report of Mrs. Sidney R. Drexler, Allendale dog warden: The pup, less than a year old, was found about a month ago chained to an old wagon bed in a field near Ramsey. The padlocked chain was embedded in his neck. His owner was not identified. Mrs. Drexler took the pup to the kennel operated by Dr. Thomas J. Lynch, Ramsey veterinarian. There the dog's sores were healed. The pup's friendliness is what has extended his days beyond the legal two-week limit for unclaimed dogs, officials said. The dog has been boarded at the kennels with payments being made by the Animal Protective League of Allendale. But the boarding fees cannot be less he's adopted, the dog warden kept up much longer. The pup may not see the new year in wednesday he's adopted, the dog warden said reluctantly.
