defeated the contract. West's opening lead of the queen of diamonds was won by Leo (sitting South) with the king. (The ace should not be played because the opening lead: by West denies the king of dia-monds, but does not deny the ree.)
The thing that Leo wanted to do was to keep the opponents from switching to hearts. He immediately led the queen of spales. East won the trick with the king, and hoping to establish the diamond suit, returned a dia-mond. Leo won this with the ace. Now he cashed the balance of the spades.

His next play was the ace of clubs, on which East played the seven spot. Leo then led the deuce of clubs, and when East deuce of clubs, and when East-played the queen, he let him hold the trick. East had nothing but hearts left, so all he could do and then lead a heart to dummy's king. It was then that Leo made the remark that East should have played the queen of clubs played the queen of cluos on the ace, as his queen was dead anyhow, hoping that his partner held the jack of clubs. You can see what happens if East does play the queen on the ace of
