Two times in his career as pro-ducer-playwright Russell Crouse tried to be a professional actor. Both times he bobbled his en-trances. When he played a re-porter in "Gentlemen of the Press" he was supposed to make a dashing entrance out of a tele-phone booth into the editorial room of a newspaper. Came time for his entrance and Crouse could SUNNY SIDE Manseleum not open the door. Another time he started to go on for one performance as the Second Doctor in his production of "Life With Father." Crouse or "Life with Father." Crouse was supposed to walk on stage, say one line and then walk off. Crouse played it perfectly except that he made his entrance two that he made his entrance two lines before he was supposed to. Among other droll events in the theater, there happened a performance of Bernard Shaw's drama, "The Shewing Up of Blanco Posnet," on Manhattan the other afternoon and there was an audience of only a single person. Boy office recents: 2200 person. Box office recipts: zero. It seems that Gabriel Pascal, pro-
