The lifst two rounds of bidding cards, and had to save a cita to were quite good. However, it was prevent dummy's six of clubs and in my newspaper articles. I four spades. He knew that he four comments to mean question to perplex my readers.

in our newspaper, we can interpret your comments to mean that the player's first or initial meld may consist of enough different melds to count 50, 90 or 120. Kindly state plainly, and as promptly as possible, if the first play must include only one meld or if any number of different melds can be made. Don't include a lot of 'ifs' or 'ands' to cause more discussion. Just reply to the question: One meld or any number?"

You are allowed to put down as many different groups of ematched cards as you like. For example, you may put down example, you may put down and card pile?

For example, you may put down three kings, three queens and three jacks, as your initial meld, if you need only 50 or 90 points. The answer, in my correspondient's language, would be: Any number of melds is permitted.

The confusion arises from the fact that the word "meld" does not mean merely a group of three cards that you put down at your turn to play. It may also your turn to play. It may also mean all the cards that you put down, even if those happen to licitude several different groups of matching cards. For example, said in one of our games that you are allowed to use the joker when you are allowed to use the joker of matching cards. For example, said in one of our games that you are allowed to use the joker when you need 50 points in just the same way as at any other when you need 50 points in just the same way as at any other time.
