Right Defense Strategy Can Save One's Contest

By OSWALD JACOBY
Written for NKA Service.
"We have come across a defensive play that was not actually made in one of our recent games," writes a Birmingham correspondent.
"We discovered later on that the hand could have been set by the proper play. However, we do not see how West could have known that this was the correct play."
"West led the five of spades, East played the queen, and South won with the ace. South led a small diamond. West played the nine, dummy's jack was finessed, and East won with the ace. East then returned the seven of spades. South played the jack, and West made the fatal mistake of winning with his king."
"Now South was sure to make his contract. He won the spade return with the ten, took his clubs, and led from dummy toward his queen of hearts. East could take the king of hearts, but could not prevent South from making the contract with two spades, two hearts, one diamond and four clubs."
"After the hand had been played, somebody pointed out that West could have defeated the contract by refusing the second round of spades. Whenever East got the lead with his king of hearts, he would return his last spade. West could then take the king and the rest of the spades. "Is this something that West should have known? Or would you say that West was unlucky? I am sorry to say that West was not unlucky. He should have known what the situation was. When East returned the seven of spades, it should have been clear that he was returning his
