TIP O' THE MORNING: Ozzie Nelson and Harriet Hilliard, who turned from music to radio comedy with great success, probably will do a movie series based on their radio show.

It was the old, old story at the Masonic auditorium Sunday afternoon—a fine performance of Handel's "The Messiah," unheard by about 200 persons who, because of the limited seating capacity, were turned away.

An audience of 1,400 listened while Walter Heermann conducted the Madison Civic chorus, Madison Civic Symphony orchestra, and five soloists in 30 excerpts from the massive oratorio, whose full performance would require several hours.

Written in 22 days, this oratorio is one of history's greatest outpourings of melody and, at the same time, a monument to Handel's faith in the power of music to make men better.

For two hours Sunday afternoon, his faith was rewarded—for a Christian cannot listen to "The Messiah" without having his own faith strengthened, especially in view of the obvious devotion of the civic music forces to their annual presentation.

As in the past, the chorus sang with exultation. This year, it gave even more attention than ever to the dynamics of the music, following Heermann's shading with colorful results.

Every one of the soloists—three visitors and two from the chorus' ranks—gave a worthy performance.

Ralph Nielson, Chicago tenor, and Robert Tottingham, Madison basso, were particularly good, their voices round, warm, and of fine quality.

made to order for the difficult Handelian measures. Nielson was heard here for the first time, and he revealed a voice of operatic calibre.

Marian Moore, soprano whose home formerly was at Evansville, had a strikingly clear and sweet delivery; Marian Austin, contralto, again showed a beautiful tone, and Ralph James, Madison basso, was effective in his two solos—especially the spirited "The Trumpet Shall Sound."

The orchestra, except for its support in the more resounding choruses, was not up to its standard.
