state's cooperative extension work in agriculture and home economics.

Wisconsin Rural Art show. Schwalbach has been conferring with sponsoring groups to set dates Growth of the junior division of the annual event has led to a de cision to divide the exhibition, with an adult show May 26 to June 11 in the Memorial Union and a junior show during the University of Wisconsin summer session, also in the Memorial Union.

This will be the 11th annual or regional shows, which will start late this month or early in February. One-day art schools in each area have been scheduled.

Another change in the setup is expected to permit almost every county to have at least one regional show every five years. This will be accomplished through rotating sponsorship among the counties in each region. "This long-term plan," Schwal bach said, "will make it possible to bring the art shows closer to the people, bring in new blood cach year, and lighten the sponsorship load on each agricultural extension office." These offices handle de-
