SPOTLIGHT

Lotte Lehmann

TIP O' THE MORNING: "Father Knows Best" may leave radio in favor of television.

Only once more will a Madison audience hear the voice of Lotte Lehmann.

That will be Wednesday night in the Wisconsin Union theater, when she gives the last concert of her 41-year career—the last, except for perhaps an occasional appearance on the West coast.

But that voice will not be stilled for those who hear her, any more than for those 1,300 who filled the theater Monday night and sat enthralled by its perfect texture, its glowing warmth, its heroic proportions.

We shall hear it long in memory. To Mme. Lehmann, it may—as she wrote to a friend—sound "dull," but not to us.

To Mme. Lehmann, it may be true that "this is the time"—as she told her reporter Monday night—but to her listeners, it seemed impossible.

What a superlative accompanist! Paul Ulanowsky, said is, however, true.

"I have played for others. I shall play for others... but this was the era."

Even after the stage lights had dimmed and the auditorium's had brightened, her audience held its seats and applauded, calling for more.

In answer, she gave a second encore; the first had been Schubert's "The Trout," the second was his "To Music."

In addition, the listeners had called her back for seven bows.

Mme. Lehmann sang from the works of Schubert, Wolf, Hahn, and Brahms.

For the gay songs, her voice was that of youth. For the dramatic ones, it was the voice of majesty.

In Wolf's "Auf Ein Altes Bild," a song of the Holy Virgin and the Christ Child, there was everlasting tragedy; in Hahn's "A Nos Mortis Ignorant," overwhelming sorrow.

Perhaps Mme. Lehmann is right—perhaps she knows best whether "this is the time."

Certainly it will be better to remember her voice as it was Monday night than to have to acknowledge later that her judgment was as faultless as her singing.

VISITORS: So great was the interest in Mme. Lehmann's concert here that the theater received telephoned ticket orders Monday from Chicago, Evanston, and other Illinois cities.

Chicago newspapers and musical magazines will be represented in the Wednesday night audience.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY: A chorus of 60 children from Washington school's fifth and sixth graders will sing in a Washington birthday program during "Music Enjoyment" over WHA at 8:30 a. m. Thursday.

Under the direction of Katherine L. Jones, the chorus will sing "America, the Beautiful," "Co-
