Video Toughest Theatrical Medium, Says Veteran Actor

By JOHN ROSENBERG

NEW YORK (UP) Veteran troupier William Gargan said here that television is the toughest of all mediums for an actor to handle.

He advised Hollywood stars who are looking for TV roles to "get ready to sweat."

Gargan has spent nine years in the legitimate theater, 18 in films and several more in radio. Currently he is the star of "Martin Kane, Private Eye," which NBC-TV carries to 61 cities. It ranked among the top 15 in popularity.

"The demands of television, where the actor is concerned, by far exceed those of any other medium," he said. "To begin with, it has a memory problem that is almost frightening.

"On my show, for instance, I must memorize an average of 40 pages of dialogue each week. While an actor must memorize as many pages--if not more--for a stage show, he usually has about a four-week rehearsal period. And once a show is running, of course, lines are repeated every day.

"In making a movie, if an actor drops a line, or flubs a scene, it's a simple matter to do a retake. Many directors spend days perfecting a scene or a line. In television, you have less than a week to perfect a performance. And once you're on, there are no retakes.

Grogan said changing of sets and the precision with which they were moved were obstacles rarely encountered in other mediums.

"An average of 14 sets are used on the Martin Kane show," he said. "And they are switched in a 30-minute period.

"And playing on a television set is one of the toughest jobs of all. Once you're in place, you've got to be on the exact

Gas Explosion Danger at Hyperion Denied

LOS ANGELES, March 7. (UP) City Engineer Lloyd Aldrich said there is "absolutely no danger of an explosion at Hyperion sewage treatment plant."

He told the city council yesterday that minor cracks have been found in the domes of digester tanks which are normal in concrete construction but the amount of gas leakage is negligible.
