Truman Joins Navy Men in Prayer for GIs Dead in Korea

KEY WEST, Fla. —(U.P.)—Pres. Truman worshipped with navy enlisted men at Protestant church services this Palm Sunday and joined in a prayer for the men who have died in Korea.

An early riser, the president was up a few minutes before 6 a.m.—half an hour earlier than his usual vacation rising time. He shaved, bathed, took a 10-minute walk on the U.S. naval base, and ate breakfast.

Then, with members of his White House staff, he motored a few blocks in his black limousine to the little white stucco memorial chapel on the base for 11 a.m. Protestant services.

Mr. Truman, wearing a blue summer suit, black and white sports shoes, white shirt, and a blue figured tie, joined in prayer and hymn singing. And he heard Navy Lieut. Harold F. Menges, 42-year-old Protestant chaplain, deliver a sermon whose text—"In the beginning, God"—was taken from the book of Genesis.

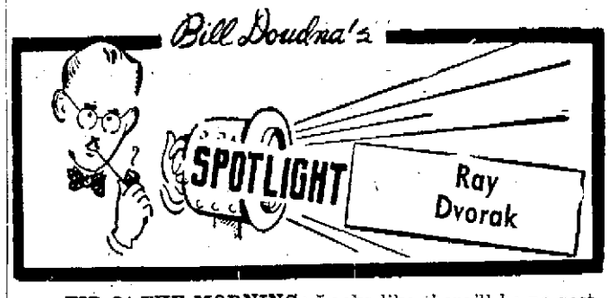
After the services, Mr. Truman shook hands with Menges and said: "Thank you very much, Chaplain. It was a very fine service."

As soon as the services ended, Mr. Truman motored back to the "Little White House," changed into swim trunks, and went to the beach for a sunbath and a 15-minute swim.

No official visitors were scheduled Sunday or today.

MONTICELLO CONCERT

MONTICELLO — School band members, vocalists, and other musicians, directed by John Page, bandmaster, will present their last program before the spring musical festival Wednesday at 8 p.m. in Karlen's hall here.



TIP O' THE MORNING: Looks like there'll be no rest from "folksy" waltzes — a new one, "On Top of Old Smoky," appears to be headed for the hit list.

* * *

It was like old home week in the Wisconsin Union theater Sunday afternoon. Ray Dvorak—Prof. Raymond F. Dvorak, that is—was back with his customary vigor and originality, plus a freshly-received talent for the piano and a new right arm.

Almost three years ago, the University of Wisconsin bandmaster began an enforced absence from his beloved organization, an absence that lasted until the 1950 football season, when he returned to lead the great Wisconsin marching organization.

A train wreck in Oklahoma caused the absence and cost Dvorak an arm, but you would never have guessed at the pain and the effort of those three years by watching him Sunday. So great was his mastery of the artificial arm that one would scarcely dream of its existence.

Surprises have always been important parts of a Dvorak concert, and this one had a couple of real ones. First, the conducter opened the second half of the concert with a pair of piano solos, his first in 25 years. Skillfully, his left hand played a Scriabine "Prelude and Nocturne" and a Bach prelude.

Then he called from the audience Paul Yoder, Chicago composer, who conducted a new work called "Joshua," a rhythmic arrangement of "Joshua Fit de Battle of Jericho," startling but entirely bandlike.

And, in encores, the organization nailed down its reputation as a singing band.

Probably the most exciting thing on the two-hour program was Harold Rusch's "Menominee Sketches," a suite of Indian music which bore the stamp of authenticity in melody and rhythms. The Ashland high school teacher succeeded in establishing the mood of Indian music in the first, highly descriptive movement, but more important he kept it throughout the four sections.

It's a suite which should become popular with bandmasters and audiences alike, especially when it's as well played as it was this time.

The concert opened with Dvorak's arrangement of the overture to Menotti's "Amelia Goes to the Ball," a successful translation of the work into band terms. Another high point in the program was the performance of "The Pines of Rome," except for some uncertainty in the clarinets in one movement. But the vital picture of children at play in the first section and the triumphant finale more than made up for the lapse.

Mary Alice Graham, graduate student from Racine, sang "A Fors e Lui" from "La Traviata" and returned, upon audience insistence, for "Lo, Hear the Gentle Lark." Miss Graham is the finest coloratura this department has heard on the campus. She has clean intonation, first-rate diction, and a feeling for this kind of music. Her voice seems to lack only the roundness that should come as it matures.

The other soloist, Robert Williams of Madison, played his arrangement of one movement of Strauss' "Concerto for Horn," giving it a good performance. The arrangement, however, let the accompaniment become heavy and allowed too little contrast between solo instrument and band.

The fact that the band performed equally well under Dvorak and his guest conductors — Yoder, Robert Fleury, and Emmett Sarig—tells the story of its training and unified ability.

Bridgeport Girl Gives Graduation Recital

HUFF

LANCASTER — Laurel Huff, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Guy A. Huff, Bridgeport, presented her graduation piano recital last week in the Grantland theater at Lancaster.

She has been studying at the St. Clement school of music in Lancaster and is a Lancaster high school senior.
