The article, written by Hellena Huntington Smith, tells of the formation of the Madison council six years ago. It describes the county was ago. It describes the coun cil's work in obtaining "falt" traf-fic laws for 'teen-agers, and tells of similar council work being done in Germantown, Pa.

The article recognizes Madison as the first city to establish a youth counci!-an idea which has spread to 14 other state communities and is being discussed throughout the nation.

The article discussed "some recent history in Madison, where teen-agers showed a degree of maturity and sound which could serve as an example to adults."

It cited the council's work in stopping a curfew law on 'teen-age drivers proposed in the state legislature and substituting instead a measure which would deprive youthful drivers of their licenses or a year if convicted of reckless driving.
It also discusses the council meetings, where a few adult "advisors who are lawyers, businessmen, or university professors sit in the back row and occasionally raise their hands and wait to be recognized by the 17-year-old chairman.

"They don't tell the kids what to do; they do offer suggestions on how to do it." the article said. The article also lands the coun il's work in obtaining a drivertraining course, in organizing the annual spring clean-up drives, and in curbing violence that followed
