No TV at Once in Madison

By WILLIAM L. DOUDNA State Journal Music Editor In spite of recent developments in the television situation, the picture as far as Madison is concerned is virtually unchanged since the last report in this department.

Television for Madison is still at least 18 months away, and perhaps much longer, depending upon the international situation.

The only favorable change is the fact that when television channels are allocated, one of those presently in use will be assigned to the city. And there is some question about the desirability of this from the viewpoint of the consumer, since it will mean that, if he wants to receive all Madison telecasts, he will have to have a receiver which will pick up the ultra high frequencies (UHF) as well as the very high (VHF).

Under the present plan, one very high frequency—in the currently used band—will be assigned to Madison, along with three ultra high. Three stations have applied for licenses—WIBA, WKOW, and WISC.

At last reports, WHA had not applied, although representatives of the University of Wisconsin station had appeared at hearings before the Federal Communications (FCC) in support of allocations to educational and other public institutions.

But, as we have told you before, and as was reported in The State Journal on Friday, Mar. 23, this is a far cry from Madison-made television pictures. Let's see what lies ahead:

Before any licenses can be granted, stations must present their cases at FCC hearings. As of now, no hearings have been held and no hearings have been scheduled. In fact, dependable sources insist that there will be no hearings before autumn.

These hearings usually occupy several months, since all applications for frequencies near each other in the spectrum and for stations near each other geographically are heard before a decision is reached on any of them.

Chile, The Ribbon Republic

People sometimes speak of "the A.B.C." countries of South America—Argentina, Brazil and Chile. These republics border one another and together they make up a great deal of the area of South America.

Chile is the smallest of the three in area and population, but it is one of the longest nations in the world and deserves its name of "ribbon republic." It holds first place among the "long narrow" countries of the world. Norway is second. Chile is about 2,700 miles long. Its average width is only 87 miles. If the country could be lifted up and placed on North America, the northern end would touch Hudson Bay and the southern end the Panama Canal.

Mixing of Races More than 5/2 million people live in Chile, according to the latest estimate. About one third of these are full-blooded whites; the rest are Indians or are of mixed race. Hardly one fourth of a million full-blooded Indians live in Chile today—the majority of the population is made up of "mestizos" who are partly white and partly Indian.

The central part is the best region of Chile. It contains the largest and most important cities—Santiago, Valparaiso and Concepcion. Central Chile contains rich farmlands and has a fine, mild climate. The winters are not very cold, and this area has been called "a place of everlasting spring."

Barley, oats, wheat, corn and beans are leading crops of central Chile. The fruits include figs, apricots, apples and grapes, and there also are olive orchards.

Has Tall Peaks From the smiling valleys it is possible to pass quickly to a land of great heights in Chile. Some of the peaks are as tall as Mt. McKinley, Alaska, and along the border of Chile are taller peaks than Mt. McKinley. Across the border and inside Chile, is Mt. Aconcagua, the tallest peak in the New World. This peak has a height of 49,600 feet above sea level. Aconcagua is half a mile higher than Mt. McKinley, the highest peak in North America.

Chile has many railway lines, and some of the trains are of a modern type, giving excellent service. Travelers can go by rail from Chile into Argentina, thanks to a cogwheel line which crosses the Andes mountains.

Indians Partly Civilized The leading Indian tribe of Chile is made up of Araucanians, who now number about 120,000. In certain areas these Indians have adopted ways of white men, and have farms.

Even a "rich" Araucanian is likely to have a rather crude home. This has a framework of wood, and is covered or thatched with straw. Not a single window is to be seen in a typical home of this type, but there are doorways to let in a bit of light.
