Apparently not. Psychologists Pintner, Forlano, and Freedman, had 819 children, from 10 to 14 years old, list their three best friends. They then gave all the children many tests of intelligence and personality. They found that the children paid littie attention to whether their friends were like them in mental ability and personality traits.

Not necessarily. This is due select those with opposite charto what psychologists call lack acteristics, or with very much
