. This is really a banner year for Louis Armstrong, as far as the record companies are concerned. Columbia has brought out "The Louis Armstrong Story", a set of four 12-inch longplaying records (or four albums of 45-rpm discs) reissuing just

Boston jazz concert of Nov. 30, 1947. Only trouble is, the Armstrong fans are going to be in a dither to determine which to buy—unless they're really in the chips. Chances are they'll be saving their pennies and buying them, one by one, as they can afford them. For these are records that will never grow stule as far as jazz collectore are tale as far as jazz collectors are the Armstrong improvisational concerned.

The Decca album contains 18 But Love", with one of Louis' greatest vocals; "Confession", selections recorded at the Boston concert by Louis and the Ali Stars. Satchmo himself is featured vocally on "Black and Blue". Side of the Street" and, with Velma Middleton, "That's My Desire." Velma has two solo numbers, "I Cried for You" and "Since I Fell for You."

Jack Teagarden displays his trombone virtuosity on "Lover" and his vocal work on "Stars Fell on Alabama" and "Baby, Won't You Please Come Home," Barney Bigard's fine clarinet work is featured on "Tea for Two" and "Body and Soul." Arveil Shaw's bass and Soul." Arven snav plucking is the big feature of paired with a revival of "I Can't Phow High the Moon", and the late Believe That You're in Love With Big Sid Catlett's drumnastics are showcased on "Steak Face" and "Me" with vocal by Janet Thurlow. strating the band's conception of bop.
