^~\ NO 🗀 HE ENBLE GIVES A GOOD PICTURE OF A NEUROTIC?

YES 🗖

Answer to Question No. 1 Yes. Since the divorce rate is much higher among couples of leisure than among working couples or couples in which only the father works, that seems to onswer the question. Too much leisure does not make for happiness of any kind. Even without children, the marriage is more likely to be happy when both sexes have congenial work. However, over three-fourths of marriage as a series of the sexes have congenial work.

marriages are happy anyhow.

Answer to Question No. 2 No. They have enlarged the infinity within man and the infinity without, but they have done little to show the average man the possibilities of a richer, more meaningful religious life. As a consequence, people flock to mystics, mediums, star gazers, pseudo-psychoanalyzers.

Scientists have done little to bring the common man into the world of spiritual values that they themselves know. Answer to Question No. 3

Biblical scholars tell me the Book of Job is a "drama of the inner life." They say the vari-ous characters represent the warring selves in man's nature the good and bad, the intelligent and foolish—fighting for supremacy. During one period Job was a neurotic. Finally, when his distracted soul repents over the unworthy self to which he had temporarily yielded, he comes to a great peace of mind and unity of life.
