Answer to Previous Puzzle

No, the reverse. Psychologist Leon Saul says that the infant's first need is to be loved. In child-hood he gradually develops an outgoing feeling toward others that we call "love." At puberty, he normally "falls in love" with the opposite sex. The normal adult both loves and needs to be loved. Those who never grow into yeal love become dependent into real love become dependent, clinging vines. Our booklet, average man can guess for him-self. Science gives us knowledge, but philosophy gives us what is more important—wisdom. Answer to Question No. 3

No. Ordway Tead writes that one college president often wished he were a prison warden or head of an orphan asylum. Prison alumni seldom return tall the worden how to turn to tell the warden how to run things and the head of an orphan asylum doesn't have to deal with parents. He might have added—if the college is a state institution—he also has to deal with politicians. The life of a college president is not a hap-
