Answer to Question No. 3

No, not living history. You can learn dates and events but not life of the people—the most important part of history. You can learn this only from biographies and novels that are true to life. I've learned more of the early life of America from Margaret Leighton's brilliant new novel, "The Sword and the Compass," than from many text books. Fascinating both for 10 and 70-year-olds.
