Red Tape Choking Small Businesses

By HAL BOYLE

NEW YORK. (#) Small business is crying "Help!" again. The plight of the small businessman has a roused much sympathy. But the small businessmen themselves would like less sympathy - and more or-

One of their spokesmen is Herbert Barchoff, 36-year-old vice president of the Eastern Brass & Copper Co., a metals warehouse and processing firm. "The small businessman today is bewildered by restric-tions on the use of basic metals -brass, copper, aluminum and steel." he said. "He can't get enough material to continue full manufac-ture of consumer goods. He can get material to work on defense contracts - but he isn't getting those defense contracts fast enough to stay in business."

Barchoff said there are "thousands and thousands" of small firms faced with suspension of operations.

'It is an odd thing to say," he remarked, "but they are being hurt more by a percentage war than in an all-out war. In an all-out war the government needs things in a hurry, and the contracts filter down quickly to their level.
"There were a lot of casualties in the last war. Some of those who survived then say they are having even tougher going now.

"They're drowning. Any number won't be able to survive until the third quarter of 1952. when the government hopes to release additional quantities of aluminum and steel for civilian Barchoff held a pioneering "shirtsleeve" conference at his own plant" last summer to atthe problem. He brought together government officials, representatives of big business, and hundreds of small business men. Similar conferences are

"But we need to get together a basic organization to filter down small contracts to small business firms faster." he said. "That will still salvage some."

Major government agencies dispensing defense contracts now have units to deal with small business. But Barchoff feels they should be consolidated into one outfit.
"Then the small businessman could go to a single place in-stead of being pushed from pil-lar to post," he said. "The average small businessman is discouraged by red tape. He gives it up as hopeless. He can't afford to go to Washington and fight for a contract. He simply goes out of busi-

Another possible solution, Barchoff feels, is regional pools of small businessmen organized to handle major contracts.

"But the main trouble up until now is there simply hasn't been enough government order-

Yes, said sociologist Phillip Hauser at a recent conference on problems of old age. Provision for the employment for older persons — and not pensions and idleness — is the "master key" to the problem, he maintained. He claimed it would be difficult to devise a more costly system to produce manpower waste and throw heavier burdens on both industry and younger workers than that of merely providing an arbitrary retiring age on pensions instead of maintenance of employment.
