LOOKING AND LISTENING

Elaborate Preparations for Rose Bowl Game on TV

By TOM E. DANSON

HOLLYWOOD... The engineering department of television station KNB, Channel 4, is humming these days with plans for its forthcoming telecast of the Rose Bowl classic on New Year's Day. For the first time in history, viewers will watch the game coast to coast when KNB handles the origination for the micro-wave release. Very interesting fact on the transmission, according to the engineers, is the time differential for the time of play until the picture appears on the TV screens in New York. It seems almost unbelievable, but they claim a time lag of only 1-60th of a second! As engineering field supervisor Jack Burrell put it: "We apologize to New York for their being that far behind the play."

High light of the plans for this telecast is what has, until recently, been regarded by KNB as "top secret," their new "black box." This piece of equipment, designed and built in the KNB laboratory on a hush-hush basis, is actually a "walkie-talkie," or, an independent mobile camera unit which is operated completely without cables, using enough six volt storage batteries to supply a large fleet of automobiles. Using a 1500-watt converter, this unit can operate independent of all circuits for an estimated period of two hours.

More than 200 man hours will be required to do the telecast, with the use of four cameras. Three cameras will be placed high in the stadium for football action, with one camera in a booth for commercials. According to Bill Bennington, remote telecast supervisor, 11 engineers will be on duty at the bowl, with three program men from NBC, one agency man, two page boys and two highly trained men referred to by Bennington as messengers.

Approximately $250,000 worth of equipment will be stationed on the field with more than 2000 feet of cable. Bud Cole directs all programming and Don Thompson supervises the program operations.

DOWN TV-RADIO ROW... Comedian Alan Young recently came up with a comedy satire on Renzo Cesana, "The Continental" (now going CBS-TV network). Renzo, knowing in advance that Alan would do the takeoff, went to CBS to watch. During the performance the suave and debonair continental blushed a deep scarlet, and quietly retreated through a side exit. Now he knows how the fellow feels that has to watch HIM!
