

TIP O' THE MORNING: It's practically certain now that "The Halls of Ivy" will be on Broadway as a play in the spring of 1952 with the Colmans playing the leads.

"FACE OF YOUTH," a movie produced by the bureau of risual instruction at the University of Wisconsin, is "a first-rate film by almost every standard," according to a re-view of the picture by Cecile Starr in the Saturday Review of Literature.

The writer describes it as "one of those film surprises a reviewer dreams of but never really expects to stumble on."

It tells of two boys, Alex and Ralph, and the help they get from parents and community servants-teachers, nurses, and others.

"Their story," Miss Starr writes, "is most convincingly projected onto the screen, but most exciting is the background feeling which the film conveys. Children can be helped to the happiness that is health while they are young, while there is time. Troubles can be alleviated before they become permanent patterns. The face of youth is soft and smooth and can be molded into an attractive adulthood."

She describes the photography as "fine throughout and in certain scenes . . . it is superb." And the editing of Ralph's first visit to a psychiatrist and his mother's talk with a social worker is "an example of real skill and imagination," she reports.

The review points out that "Face of Youth" is practically a oneman job by Herman Engel, who researched, wrote, directed, edited, recorded, and, in truth, made the film. His photographer, Martin Lobdell, deserves special mention, as do the university's visual instruction head, Walter Wittich, and the Wisconsin mental health division's psychiatrist, Dr. Eugenia S. Cameron. Music by Hilmar F. Luckhardt of the university staff (school of music) adds further to the film's distinctiveness.

"In short, the film should be an inspiration to parents, educators, health leaders, sponsors, and makers of non-theatrical films, as well as those of us who occasionally wonder if there is still opportunity for a talented, hard-working, sincere individual to make a film if he wants to make it."

ALICE': A British film version of "Alice in Wonderland" will be shown at the Madison theater beginning Monday. It received first-rate reviews in the East.

FROM INDIA: The India assn. at the University of Wisconsin will present a program of Indian classical dances and music of the East at 4:15 p. m. Sunday, Jan. 13, in the Wisconsin Union theater.

The program will star Medha von Essen, Bombay-born artist who has studied dance since the age of 7. She is now studying biochemistry and bacteriology at the University of Chicago. Born Medha Yodh, she married a Swedish medical student, Carl von Essen, when both were students at Stanford university.
