FEATURE: Alice in Wonder-

At the Shows

TYPE: Leo Bunin's new English version-done with a cast made up chiefly of puppets—not to be con-fused with the current Walt Disney edition using animated car-toons or the movie that depended on the good, old-fashioned human REVIEWER: Helen Matheson COMMENT: Sorry, this still isn't the "Alice" or your own wonder-ous imagining.

This interpretation perhaps is a little more faithful to the story than Disney's and many of the characters are amusingly reminiscent of the Tenniel drawings.

But the production lacks the inspired creative imagination required to translated "Alice" into a new medium. And poor handling of the technical problems makes fan-tasy that should shimmer and flow limp instead, and stumble infuriat-

The picture begins with an attempt to identify the real-life inspirations of the story — Victoria, for the Queen of Hearts, and Oxford university officials as the White Rabbit and Cheshire Caf, for example. When the real story be gins the action depends on well-conceived, poorly photographed puppets. Only Alice (portrayed by girl who scems too mature for he role) is real. There are some charming scene not caring greatly whether the finesse succeeded or failed. The day after Christmas is tradictionally devoted to puzzles and ditionally devoted to puzzles and learts.

After winning the first round of Many's the time I've spent hours trying to work out the puzzle of that was really a safety play.

In short, he finessed dummy's unceeded or laned.

If you think the safety play is full; some of the production details full; some of the production details seem quite irrational (why, for exsouth puts up dummy's queen of ample, couldn't Alice really swim hearts.

The suit fails to break, and now only one spade can be discarded. South must try the spade finesse, which loses and he is left with
