

Here's How Young Artist Makes Mask for Theater Production

It doesn't seem possible, but—that collection of masking tape, cloth, newspaper, and water coloring held by Joan Talliferro (left) and Lois Shoemaker can be made into a mask in an hour or so.

Lois—who is a past master in the making of masks and who has been the mainstay of the youth summer theater group for the past several years—shows how to get started making a mask, in the picture above.

A few minutes later, Joan looks like this, and Lois is rapidly licking another of the dozens of feet of masking tape which go into the foundation of the mask.

And now look what's happened! Joan has a whole new visage, and Lois is putting on the finishing touches of the paint job.

When it's all done, Joan takes a look at herself in the mirror, and immediately strikes a pose inspired by her new mask, which will be worn in a jungle scene in a youth production coming up.

Spiders Got Blame for Illness

Spiders differ widely in size. Some are so small that several of them might rest on a penny—if they knew how to get along with one another!

Other spiders are so large that they might make a person fearful, just because of their size. Among these are wolf spiders and tarantulas. Often they are so large that the surface of a silver dollar would be too small for them to use in spreading their legs.

Almost at the southernmost tip of Italy is the city of Taranto, which gave its name to a type of spider. It contains more than 150,000 people, and is a seaport of some importance.

In times of long ago, Taranto had the Latin name of Tarentum. Out of its name grew "tarantula," certain spiders were called tarantulas because many of them were found near the city.

That is only part of the story. Hundreds of persons in and around the city became sick with a strange illness, and the spiders were blamed as the cause.

"Known as 'tarantism,' this illness made people feel very sad, until they heard music. Then they would spring up and dance.

Modern doctors say that it was a mistake to blame the illness on tarantulas. These spiders do send poison into those they bite, and may cause serious trouble, but we are without proof that this poison can give a person tarantism.

Many parts of Latin America have spiders which are similar to the tarantulas of Italy. The ones which are native to Latin America are larger than those of Italy, on the average, and some-times are carried into northern parts in the midst of bunches of bananas.

In the entire spider family, the biggest members are those known as bird-eating spiders. They are natives of tropical areas, and are found chiefly in the warmer parts of South America.

Some bird-eating spiders are large enough to spread their legs clear across a man's outspread hand. The body alone may be as much as 3 1/2 inches long!

We may wonder how a spider could eat a bird. The answer is partly that this spider seeks out young birds. It seems to go into the nests of hummingbirds most often.

Because of their name, a person might suppose that birds make up their usual food. The truth is that they eat insects far more commonly. The startling fact is that any spider can attack a bird's nest with success.
