

TIP OF THE MORNING: More and more stars of the Metropolitan Opera Co. probably will show up as guest stars on NBC programs this winter and spring.

IF CHRISTOPHER FRY HAD planned "A Sleep of Prisoners" only as an engrossing play with a powerful impact upon his audience's emotions, he could not have been more successful. The fact that he intended it as a means of repeating his idea that "progress is the growth of vision" has become secondary to the fact of the play's great dramatic quality...

This was the story of four prisoners housed in a church. Each dreamed of himself as a Biblical character, with his companions in Biblical roles whose characteristics were those the dreamer felt were rightfully theirs. At the end, the dream of one brought all together in the same fantasy—a disturbingly realistic scene of sleepwalking.

Told in poetry, the play moved inexorably, which is the manner of great poetry on the stage. The four fine actors read their lines with full realization that they had verse at hand, but with an unyielding feel for realism in both the solid drama and the brightening comedy.

Donald Harron was the even-tempered, take-it-as-you-find-it Peter Able; Leonard White the erratic, unsubstantial David King; Stanley Baker the sturdy corporal with an inborn ability to give orders, and Clarence Derwent the aging, common-sensed Tim Meadows.

The fact that this full-length play could hold its audience completely without intermission showed better than anything else the power of the writing, the virtue of the acting, and the soundness and imagination of Michael MacOwan's direction.

"THE ENDLESS FRONTIER": With Raymond Massey as narrator, "The Endless Frontier," a new series of five documentary programs dramatizing achievement in medical research, will be broadcast on NBC-WIWA every Saturday from Jan. 28 through Feb. 23 as a joint presentation by the National Broadcasting Co. and the Health Information Foundation.

"Our Daily Bread," the initial program, will dramatize the story of nutrition—how food becomes part of the human machine—with many prominent scientists participating.

Among them will be Dr. William T. Murphy, 1934 Nobel prize winner; Dr. William B. Castle, director of Boston City hospital's Thorndyke laboratory; Dr. Frederick J. Stare, head of Harvard university's department of nutrition; Dr. Robert Harris, of M. I. T.; Dr. Robert S. Goodhart, of the National Vitamin Foundation, Inc.; Dr. M. E. Shils, Columbia university; and Dr. Martha Truitt, of the University of Michigan.

PLAN SEWING CLASSES: A series of adult sewing classes will get under way on Tuesday night under the direction of Ella Meyer, head of the vocational department at the high school. All Dr. Charles S. Davidson and Dr. George Mann, all of Harvard.

Aviation Groups to Form Council

Some 15 representatives of aviation groups in the state, meeting Sunday at Hotel Loraine, voted to form a state-wide Inter-Organization Council for Wisconsin Aviation.

Purpose of the organization is to coordinate efforts of all aviation groups in the state in the interests of Wisconsin aviation.

At the Shows

Orpheum: FEATURE: Decision Before Dawn. TYPE: War drama. CAST: Lt. Rennick, Richard Basehart, Col. Devlin, Gary Merrill, Happy Oskar Werner, Hildegarde Neff, Monique Dominique Blanchard.

REVIEWER: Wally Wikoff. STORY: Allied G2, looking for men among their German prisoners who want to work against the Nazis, find a youth, code name "Happy," who seems to fit the bill.

He is parachuted into German territory to locate the 14th German Panzer division and report back his find.

Meeting his own people again, talking to his father and the depressed women of Germany eats into his conscience. After considerable difficulty, he establishes his rendezvous with Lt. Rennick and both attempt to flee back to Allied lines.

HIGH POINTS: Excellent use of the ruins of Germany to give authenticity to the horrors of the last years of the war. Brilliant performances by Oskar Werner as the young German who had to make a final decision during pursuit.

LOW POINTS: The absurd escapes, even tough for Superman. A film with terrific potentials, good acting, and good background ruined by fantastic escapes from the inescapable.

VERDICT: See "How Points" above.

War Pensions Anger Japanese

Bereaved Families Protest Meager Plan

TOKYO—(AP)—Cries of angry disappointment drowned out Japanese officials Sunday when they tried to explain the government's first, and admittedly meager, war pension plan to the Japanese League of Bereaved Families.

About 800 league members, representing 8,000,000 immediate relatives of nearly 2,000,000 war dead, attended the meeting in Hoseni university hall.

One old man whose son died in World War II brandished a medieval spear and threatened to use it on Premier Shigeru Yoshida, who was not present.

Later, about 200 of the delegates went 30 miles to Yoshida's country place at Oiso and sat down outside his gate for several hours, but Yoshida did not appear.

The war pension issue has raised a storm in the government and in the dominant Liberal party.

Under the program, a war widow would get the yen equivalent of $1.65 a month, while the top payment to a totally disabled veteran would be the equivalent of $150 a year.

When it was being discussed recently, Finance Minister Hayato Ikeda remarked that it was "barely sufficient for bereaved families to buy candles for the altar."

The year's total war relief payments in the new occupation-approved budget would equal $64,000,000.

When the budget was approved by the occupation authorities on Jan. 17, Welfare Minister Ryuzo Hashimoto resigned in protest. He had proposed a $278,000,000 total but this was held to be far more than the government could afford.
