Fine Recordings for All Ages

By WILLIAM J. DODNA (State Journal Music Editor) Some of the finest recordings have come out of the waxworks in the last few weeks, and here are reports on some of the best: Schumann: "Concerto in A Minor," recorded by Dinu Lipatti and the Philharmonia orchestra under Herbert von Karajan (Columbia)...

Interest in records for children, occasioned by the fact that I have joined the disc-jockey ranks through a children's program on WIBA, (The Kids' Club, 4:45 p.m. Monday through Friday—adv.) Several things have struck me about some of the records used on that show. One is the frequency with which high production quality is utilized; another is the educational and civic value of some of the discs; a third is the ingenuity with which some orchestras attract and hold a child's interest, partly through unusual instrumentation and partly through an economy of sound.

In the last group, some of Rosemary Clooney's songs for Columbia are especially notable. Some, for example, team bass clarinet with a strong right hand in the piano part; one pairs a xylophone with the piano's lower register. Many of the albums ("Gossamer Wump" and Victor's "Treasure Island" among them) are beautifully staged, with a use of sound effects to enhance or even to speed up the story. The late Frank Morgan narrated "Gossamer," and the combination of his dry voice and a clever script offers amusement to adults as well as children.

Tree Used as Storage Tank

Among the interesting trees of Africa is one called the "baobab." It also has the name of "monkey-bread tree." Monkeys like to climb the baobab, especially since they are able to make a meal from its fruit. The fruit in their "bread." It has juice which people, as well as monkeys, enjoy. The baobab is a huge tree. The height is not so great as that of redwood trees or Douglas firs, but sometimes a baobab is taller than a 12-story building.

Most baobabs grow in west-central Africa. Natives of that region eat the fruit and also rain. With bowls and jars they pound up the leaves to mix with streams of water have risen. Other food. Both leaves and fruit are of value in curing certain kinds of illness. The wood of the baobab does not make lumber, but the bark contains strong fibers. The bark fibers are used in making rope, also for weaving a rough kind of cloth. In some villages baobab trees with hollow trunks serve as storage tanks for water. They are employed as storage tanks for water. These villages do not have steady rainfall throughout the year. Rainy weeks are followed by a long season of dry weather. If we go to a village of the months.
