

TIP OF THE MORNING: Conrad Nagel will do a Hollywood news show and a disc jockey stint on WNBC, New York City. Nobody would be surprised if one of the other turned into a network program.

REHEARSALS for Mae West's new play, "Sextette," will begin next month, with Scott Forbes as leading man. Because of work she has put on the Frances Hope script, Miss West will be billed as co-author.

Stephen J. Baranoski, new manager of the organ department at the Forbes-Meagher Music Co., is one of the country's authorities on adapting popular music for the organ. He is the author of three books and arranger of popular, standard, and scored music for the electric organ. When he was only 10, Baranoski was organist in a leading Chicago church, which he served 24 years as organist and choir director.

Doris Day will have the title role in "Calamity Jane" when she finishes with the filming of "By the Light of the Silvery Moon."

Jessica Tandy's and Hume Cronyn's next play will be "Mr. Arcularis."

Frances Starr will top the cast when Somerset Maugham's "The Sacred Flame" opens Oct. 7 in New York City.

Rudy Vallee may replace Elliott Nugent in "The Male Animal" on Broadway.

DISC OF THE DAY: Liberace displays his varied talents on a Columbia LP, "Liberace at the Piano." The Milwaukee musician plays "Stardust," "Liebestraum," "Moonlight Sonata," "Warsaw Concerto," and other favorites. It should enlarge his list of fans.

SCREENING: A trade showing of an Italian film, "Never Take No for an Answer," will be held at 10 a. m. Saturday in the Madison theater.

MUSIC: The lives of more than 36,000 Wisconsin residents have been touched directly during the past year by the University of Wisconsin's office of music specialist, Prof. Emmett Sarig's annual report shows.

Sarig was appointed music specialist two years ago when the office was organized by the university division. Its aim is to coordinate university off-campus music activities by providing a unified program which adds to the cultural lives of both rural and urban communities and regional areas.

The extension division report says: "Sarig and his assistant, Edward Huggdahl, were responsible for adjudicating 6,835 contests between Sept. 1, 1951, and Aug. 31, 1952. They handled the state solo and ensemble contests, which brought together 8,022 young musicians in the Milwaukee area, and the Midwestern Music festival, which drew 1,455. Some 3,786 individuals were reached through agricultural extension activities and some 800 participated in music activities at the State fair.

"Other events sponsored by the office included string clinics, the Summer Music clinic and Directors' conferences, the Fred Waring Chorus Workshop on the campus, and the Waupaca festival. Musical entertainment was arranged for Farm and Home week and for the Wisconsin Education assn. annual convention.

"Sarig and Huggdahl worked with more than 3,000 boys and girls in musical organization of 46 high schools in approximately half of Wisconsin's counties.

"They offered music guidance to the Green Lake 4-H Leadership conference, which drew 250 persons from 22 counties and three leadership training conference which drew 800.

"Additional functions of the office include local music surveys, encouragement of campus visits by music students, projects in radio, television, and movies, local and regional workshops, co-operation with local and national musical organizations, research activities, and general participation in university events.

OFFICIAL WELCOME: Charley Cantor, who set the amazing record of 35,000 broadcasts in 25 years as a radio actor, was officially welcomed into the movies last week at Warner Bros. studio. The official welcome was the whimsical idea of Broderick Crawford, an alumnus of radio who is star of "Stop, You're Killing Me," in which Cantor as a member of the supporting cast has his second movie role.

The sentimental gesture took the form of a specially catered luncheon on the set. Roy Del Ruth, director of the picture, made a neat little speech calling Cantor's attention to the superior advantages of working in pictures, particularly Warnercolor pictures, following which something nice was said by members of the cast, including Claire Trevor, Bill Hayes, Virginia Gibson, Howard St. John, Sheldon Leonard, Joe Vitale, Margaret Dumont, Henry Morgan, many of whom have worked at one time or another with Cantor in radio.

Cantor established his fabulous record, which won him the title of "Anonymous the Great," by being ready, willing and able throughout the last quarter to play throughout in any dialect (except Swedish), and to imitate lions, chickens (both sexes), birds, dogs, babies, trains, police and factory whistles, and airplanes in good and bad repair.

"Duffy's Tavern," in which he played "Finnegan" for 10 years, was practically the only radio show in which his name was mentioned, but Cantor has acted on as many as 30 radio shows in one week.

For a time he was in seven shows on the same day each week: "Easy Aces," "Dick Tracy," "The House of Glass," "Dangerous Paradise," and "The Amazing Mr. Smith."

Cantor is strictly a radio product, with the exception of a short hitch in vaudeville and the movie version of "Duffy's Tavern." Dialects are his dish. He passes up Swedish because he never knew a Swede who talked funny, but he takes in stride Greek, Irish, French, German, Brooklyn, Dixie, rube, hillbilly, English, or any other
