What's There to Do in '52?

But 100 years ago today, Madison was doing pretty well, especially in view of its population, which was just under 3,000. In 1852, it had the theater, music, circuses, and a fair.

True, it had no city auditorium nor art gallery—but that's true of Madison in 1952, too. It had no theaters, but it had plays, for Langrishe, Atwater, and Co. were giving comedies and dramas—including "The Lady of Lyons," already a classic—in an upstairs auditorium called Lewis' hall. Box scats were 50 cents each,

"raised scals," 25 cents.
It wasn't very big, apparently, for a newspaper critic tore into Mr. Atwater, the leading man, for ignoring the size of the hall and aweing the spectators with his voice and actions There were no phonographs, but music boxes were advertised in The State Journal.

Books and art works were heavily advertised, too, so apparently there was a demand for them.

Three circuses came to town that year, one of them claiming a tent 100 by 300 feet, and the crowd was so great that 2,000 had to stand to see the show.
While there were no radios, the newspapers carried an advertisement strangely prophetic of modern radio ilngles:

"Something New for Fifty-Two . . ." The Six Bakers, a touring company, gave a concert in the courthouse. The Madison Female Acade emy presented "an entertainment of vocal and instrumental music." Sunday schools had plenics, there was a well attended series of lectures on anatomy and physiology, which won commendation from a group of the community's best-known women through a letter in the public prints. Hunting and fishing were sport as well as a means of filling the larder, and horses and buggles were available for rides around town and into the countryside.

A cattle show and fair were held that year, and many Madisonians went to the state fair at Mil-

Those musically inclined could take lessons at Special Events Take away movies, the zoo, radio, phonographs, television, and the libraries and much of today's were given at $8 per quarter, with an additional Madison population would wonder what it would do for entertainment and culture. painting were given regular atudents at a cost of $3 per quarter above the tuition fees.

by Bernard M. Baruch, The University of Wisconsin had an "oratorical Religion exhibition" that year—and for further diversion and Religion ducation there were frequent political meetings and parades. the Rev. S. S. Klyve.

Mostly, you see, the people entertained them-selves and each other, and who can say that today's vays are better?
