

TIP OF THE MORNING: You can expect more circuses and carnivals to play Wisconsin during the 1953 season than at any time in recent history.

TWENTY-FIVE years ago the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences gave its first "Academy Awards," now known familiarly as "Oscars." The silver anniversary ceremony will be held March 19 in Hollywood, and everyone who has any interest in the movies is busy guessing about the outcome.

Today, let's look backward instead of forward. The 1928 award for the best production went to Paramount's "Wings." Emil Jannings was voted best actor for his work in "The Way of All Flesh" and "The Last Command," and Janet Gaynor won the actress' crown for "Seventh Heaven," "Street Angel," and "Sunrise."

Fewer awards were given in the first few years than now, but in 1928 they included two for direction, while only one director is cited these days. The 1928, Frank Borzage won the "Oscar" for the best director, while Lewis Milestone took one as comedy director. Borzage's picture was "Seventh Heaven," Milestone's was "Two Arabian Knights."

Writing awards went to Ben Hecht for "Underworld," Benjamin Glazer for his adaptation of "Seventh Heaven," and Joseph Farnham for "Fair Co-Ed," "Laugh, Clown, Laugh," and "Telling the World." Charles Rosher and Karl Struss were honored for their camera work on "Sunrise," William Cameron Menzies for his art direction of "The Dove" and "The Tempest," and Roy Pomeroy for engineering effects in "Wings."

Fox Pictures (now 20th Century-Fox) won an award for the "artistic quality of production" it gave "Sunrise." And Warner Brothers and Charles Chaplin received special citations—Warners "for producing 'The Jazz Singer,' the pioneer talking picture, which has revolutionized the industry," and Chaplin "for versatility and genius in writing, acting, directing, and producing 'The Circus.'"

That's a total of 12 regular and two special "Oscars." This year, the academy will give 26 regular awards, two for documentary and foreign pictures, and several specials.

Many of the deposters are picking, either publicly or privately. Gary Cooper and Shirley Booth for the top acting awards, with "High Noon," "The Bad and the Beautiful," and "Come Back, Little Sheena" history has shown.

ART NEWS: The Detroit Institute of Arts has chosen 15 ceramic works by Aaron Bohrod and F. Carleton Ball for exhibition in the Detroit gallery. Bohrod is artist in residence at the University of Wisconsin; Ball heads the ceramics department at Southern Illinois university.

Two members of the University of Wisconsin faculty will be on the jury of selection for the 39th annual exhibition of Wisconsin art to be held March 28 through April 26 at the Milwaukee Art Institute. The show will be sponsored by the Wisconsin Painters and Sculptors and the Institute.

The jury will be composed of Profs. Humbert Albrizio and Robert Grilley, of the university art education department; Ruth Grotenrath Lichtner, Milwaukee artist; W. S. Jackson, art manager of the Marathon Corp.; George Fredericksen, Racine artist, and
