Kolodin also asked him to redefine the motives which have kept him from playing in public except in the Prades area.

"My difficult and painful decision of voluntary exile in Prades came from the depths of my heart and conscience. I could not reconcile my feeling of grief for my notive Spain with the natural desire to perform in countries like America, which I have known and loved since 1900, but whose governments have chosen to ignore my own country's plight.

"To refuse to perform in a Soviet Russia or a Nazi Germany, as I have done since the inception of such contemporary regimes, seems onl, natural for a man of democratic principles. To have to refuse invitations from the democratic countries because of their governments' apparent lack of these same principles is indeed ironic and personaly tragic for me. It is, however, the only attitude I can take that is consistent with my feelings. These feelings have not at any time changed since 1945.

that is consistent with my feelings. These feelings have not at any time changed since 1945.

"My friend Albert Schweitzer, in discussing my attitude, once told me that, in his opinion it is more important to create than to protest. I replied, 'Why not both?'

"The great artists and people who, since 1950, have honored me by their creation of and participation in our festivals have given me the joy to be able once again to make music without compromising my convictions.

"Until such a time as the democracies find it possible to reject all dictatorships instead of only those imminently threatening them or until my conscience permits me to create without protesting, my present home shall remain the unique place of my activities."
